1. The first of these is the fact that the number of individuals in a population is not constant, but varies from time to time. This variation is due to a number of factors, including the rate of birth, the rate of death, and the rate of immigration and emigration.
The rate of birth is the number of new individuals born per unit of time, and the rate of death is the number of individuals that die per unit of time. The rate of immigration is the
move into a population per unit of time, and the rate of emigration is the number of individuals that move out of a population per unit of time. The net rate of change in the number of
is the difference between the rate of birth and the rate of death, plus the difference between the rate of immigration and the rate of emigration. If the net rate of change is positive, the number of individuals in the population will increase over time. If the net rate of change is negative, the number of individuals in the population will decrease over time.
If the net rate of change is zero, the number of
will remain constant over time.
